In Hope Dr. Cupid Will Save His Life, Miss Helen A. Wood Is Married to Fred A. Swan.

Flower Hospital Doctors Advised Ceremony When All Their Own Efforts Had Failed.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—What medical and surgical skill is unequal to, the magic balm of requited love is expected to perform in the restoration to health of Fred A. Swan, a wealthy real estate broker and civil engineer of this city, who is to-day happy in the possession of a devoted wife, who yesterday was Miss Helen Adelaide Wood of Dorchester, Mass. In the staff room of the Flower Hospital, with one-half of his body imprisoned in a rigid cast of plaster of paris and reclining on an invalid chair, the marriage ceremony was performed in the presence of the parents of the contracting parties and the staff physicians and nurses of the hospital.

It was only in the hope of saving the young brokers's life that the physicians of the hospital suggested in this unprofessional method of treatment. All other efforts had been in vain, and still the young man declined and grew weaker daily. Mr. Swan and Miss Wood were to have been married yesterday in Dorchester, and the pretty Boston suburban residence was to have been crowded, two hundred or more guests to furthinus had been issued.

On Car, Struck by Auto.

On the evening of August 20 Mr. Swan was on the running board of a north-bound Sixth avenue car. At Forty-ninth street, he was struck by an automobile owned and driven by J. R. Kirby of No. 122 West Forty-ninth street.

Mr. Swan was dragged a short distance and hurled against a pillar of the elevated. An ambulance from the Flower Hospital was called, and he was removed thither, where Dr. Day found that in addition to superficial injuries, the young man had sustained a compound fracture of the right foot and ankle, and a compound fracture of the left foot.

CIVIC OWNERSHIP BIG SUCCESS IN EUROPE

—PROFESSOR FRANK PARSONS

EMINENT ECONOMIST, RETURNING ON IVERNIA, TALKS OF CONDITIONS ABROAD.

On the Cunard liner, Ivernia, Captain W. T. Turner, which arrived in port to-day, was the largest number of passengers ever arriving in the port of Boston on one transatlantic steamship. On the big ship were 2,377 passengers, 171 in the first cabin, 242 in the second cabin, and 1,964 in the steerage. Among the passengers were 777 Russian Hebrews, more than twice as many persons of this nationality as ever arrived here before on any steamer. They were fleeing from the troubles that hang black over the empire of the Czar.

Among the saloon passengers of the Ivernia was Professor Frank Parsons, writer and political economist of Boston, and president of the Boston Municipal Ownership League.

Professor Parsons has been in Europe for several months studying the problems of municipal ownership in England and on the continent, and how it is being worked out there. He was sent there in the interests of the National Civic Federation.

Professor Parsons said to a reporter for the BOSTON AMERICAN:

Ownership a Success Abroad.

"Municipal ownership in Europe is a great success; especially is this so in Great Britain and particularly with reference to the tramways and the municipal lighting plants.

"I think that the reason for this is the high civic spirit of business men and wealthy men, which leads them to take an active part in the conduct of municipal affairs, taking seats in the councils and boards of management of the various municipal enterprises.

"The same men will be found in the council and on these boards year after year, giving freely of their time and experience, and getting no compensation save that which their pride receives in seeing the fruits of their work.

"The purity and efficiency of the boards conducting the municipal enterprises in Great Britain is remarkable—really monumental. Men, after they have got moderate fortunes, retire from business and their chief ambition is to win social eminence through the faithful performance of social services.

Better Service; Better Wages.

"On the continent there has been a great marked change that I noticed while abroad were in the railway systems of Switzerland, which the government has taken over and which is being worked out there. The purchasing and operation of the American cars and locomotives, higher wages, better men, lower fares and a general improvement in the service.

"European railways, whether owned by governments or not, do not compare favorably with those of America. Several features there are which we might learn and profit from. Those are safety appliances for passengers and for the employes and fair capitalization. There are very few instances of inflated stocks in Europe."

PARADE ON BROADWAY PRELUDE TO NEW YORK GREETING TO BRYAN

ROUSING RECEPTION GIVEN DISTINGUISHED NEBRASKAN IN HARBOR.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—William Jennings Bryan, after spending the night aboard the yacht Illini, chartered by his friend Edward F. Goltra of St. Louis, arose early to-day and prepared for the strenuous reception which his friends have provided for him.

The Nebraskan went aboard the yacht at Erie after midnight from the home of Lewis Nixon on Staten Island.

Mrs. Bryan and her daughter had gone quietly to the Hotel Victoria, where a suite had been provided for them. Arrangements have been made so that they can receive their friends apart from Mr. Bryan's political appointments. Both women slept late to-day, being thoroughly tired out by the exertions of yesterday afternoon. Mr. Bryan has made numerous appointments for each hour of the day up to the time set for his departure from the Illini for Pier A at the Battery and all day the yacht's tender was busy carrying visitors.

Bryan arose a little after 9 o'clock and spent the first hour or so after breakfast in going over his speech, to be delivered to-night in Madison Square Garden. He declared that he never felt better in his life, and looked it. He admitted that he was grateful to get on smooth water once again.

The same men will be found in the council and on these boards year after year, giving freely of their time and experience, and getting no compensation save that which their pride receives in seeing the fruits of their work.

"The purity and efficiency of the boards conducting the municipal enterprises in Great Britain is remarkable—really monumental. Men, after they have got moderate fortunes, retire from business and their chief ambition is to win social eminence through the faithful performance of social services.

Nixon Called Early.

Lewis Nixon was one of the first callers at the yacht and he was followed by members of the official reception committee who came to complete the final arrangements for the reception to follow a triumphal entry into the city and for to-night's demonstration.

Every harbor boat seemed to know the Illini, and wherever Bryan's welcome face was sighted he was cheered in noisy fashion, and then a respectful, admiring silence would add to the salute.

The Illini lay in little groups at the Battery as early as 8 o'clock, although they knew the man they had come so far to see would not land until 11 o'clock. This did not quell their curiosity one jot, and they cheered the peerless leader's every possible movement, and were generally blithesome and characteristically joyful.

From the carriage parade this afternoon to Madison square will begin. The route will be up Broadway to Fifth street, to Fifth avenue to the Hotel Victoria. At the Battery Mr. Bryan will be met by Acting Mayor McGowan, Governor Folk of Missouri, chairman of the reception committee for the Madison Square Garden meeting to-night, and President Hoar of the Commercial Travelers' Anti-Trust League.

Seven Carriages in Line.

There will be seven carriages in line, the first of which will convey Mr. Bryan, Governor Folk, Acting Mayor McGowan and William Hoge. In carriage No. 2 will be Mayor John Johnson of Cleveland, Alexander Troup of Connecticut and Norman E. Mack; Augustus Thomas, Fire Commissioner Robert Davis of Jersey City and Harry Walker will occupy the third carriage. Mayor Dahlman of Omaha, General Victor Baughman, Daniel J. Campau of Michigan and John Fox will be in the fourth carriage; Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston, Comptroller Metz, John W. Ore and John W. Tomlinson in the fifth; William Sulzer, Henry George, Jr., Bird S. Coler and Thomas L. Feitner in the sixth, and Charles F. Murphy, Borough President Ahern, U. H. P. Belmont and Lewis Nixon in the last.

TO GATHER AT VICTORIA.

On arriving at the Victoria Bryan will meet other prominent Democratic and committee members, and the departure for Madison Square Garden will be made at 7:45 o'clock. If the evening is pleasant Bryan may stop on his way to the Garden to speak to the vast crowd expected there, but if it should be stormy he will not keep the crowd waiting in the Garden. An overflow meeting will be held in the park entrance and prominent Democrats from other States will speak.

Harry W. Walker will call the meeting in the Garden to order and will introduce Governor Folk. Mayor Tom Johnson will be next on the speaking programme, to be followed by Augustus Thomas, vice-president of the Commercial Travellers' Anti-Trust League.

Six hundred policemen will be on duty at the Garden. The Garden approach will be roped off from the Fourth avenue side from Twenty-sixth to Twenty-seventh streets, and likewise on the Madison avenue side. None but persons holding admission tickets will be permitted to pass through the police lines. The doors of the Garden will open at 6 o'clock.

MOST IMPORTANT SPEECH.

Mr. Bryan will deliver what he regards as the most important speech of his career. He will probably speak for more than two hours and will discuss what he believes should be the issues in the coming presidential campaign. The speech will contain approximately between 15,000 and 18,000 words. A synopsis which Mr. Bryan has prepared contains 6,000 words. Mr. Bryan devoted several days to this preparation during his trip from Gibraltar on the Princess Irene. Proofing by his stenographer at the American dinner in London, when a speech which he will fell that Mr. Bryan will use no notes. It may be said that the speech will be the effort of Mr. Bryan's life.

Remarks that Mr. Bryan dropped during the voyage indicate that he regards government ownership of railroads and public utilities as the paramount issue, and this subject he will undoubtedly discuss at length in his speech.

Mr. Bryan will be given a reception in the Hall of Fame on Monday.

Alibi Defence of Society Physician Accused of Causing the Death of Pretty Maud Taggett at Bangor.

Special to the Boston American.

BANGOR, Me., Aug. 30.—Dr. William H. H. Briggs, the prominent society physician of Bangor, who is charged with murder for the death of pretty Maud B. Taggett of Masardis on March 1 last, testified to-day in the Superior Judicial Court in his own defence.

Under the most sensational circumstances the doctor walked to the witness stand, women patients of the doctor weeping as he began to tell his story.

"I did not meet the Taggett girl until 5:30 o'clock in the evening of Feb. 24," he said, "when, upon entering my office for the first time that afternoon, I found her waiting there."

This is the doctor's defence, for the prosecution has contended that the treatment from which Miss Taggett is alleged to have died was administered between the hours of 1 o'clock and 5:30 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, Feb. 24.

Then Dr. Briggs told the jury of his exact movements during the afternoon of February 24. He said:

CALLED ON HIS PATIENTS.

"I started from my home at 1 o'clock and made many calls that afternoon, visiting patients in the neighboring towns of Orono, Brewer and Hampden. At Orono I visited one patient where I had to stay much longer than I had expected, and I had many calls to make in that town as well as in Brewer and Hampden.

"It was not until well after 5 o'clock that Saturday afternoon that I returned to Bangor, and when I reached my office it was 5:30 o'clock. I did not meet the Taggett girl until 5:30 o'clock, when, upon entering my office for the first time that afternoon I found her waiting there. Another patient, a Mrs. Belle Wesley, was there also.

"Realizing that the girl's condition was serious, Mrs. Wesley offered to take her to her own rooms, and Miss Taggett, who said she was a stranger in the city, kay long come here from Masardis, gladly consented. The two left my office together."

HAGGARD AND WORN.

When Dr. Briggs entered court to-day for what is expected to be the crisis in the sensational trial, he was haggard and worn. His mental sufferings plainly showed on his countenance.

As he walked to the stand the court room, which was full of fashionable women patients of the society doctor of Bangor, grew still as death. It was observed that the form of Dr. Briggs had lost its erect bearing. He looked years older.

When the doctor began to testify his voice was so weak and feeble that many women broke down and wept bitterly. The doctor they had admired was a changed man. His eyes had lost their lustre. He spoke slowly and distinctly, but with apparent effort. He was neatly dressed, but that he was facing the crisis of his life and felt physically unequal to the strain his face and form plainly showed.

The announcement that Dr. Briggs was to testify in his own behalf drew the largest and most fashionable crowd to the court house to-day that has attended any session of the trial. Long before court convened every seat in the courtroom was filled.

May Be Verdict To-day.

It is possible that a verdict may be reached to-day. Junior Counsel A. L. Blanchard, for the defence, outlined his case yesterday just before closing. The defence will seek to prove an alibi for the doctor.

Several witnesses testified concerning the whereabouts of Dr. Briggs on the afternoon of Feb. 24, the substance of their testimony being that the doctor started at 1 p. m. to call on patients, that he went over a route eight or ten miles long and did not return to his office until nearly 6 p. m.

Other witnesses, Dennis Trikle and Miss Kate McFarland, testified that Miss Taggett arrived in the city about 1 p. m. on Feb. 24, and went directly to the Windsor Hotel, and that between 1:30 and 2 she called upon a chiropodist and an employment agent. At 3:30 she is said to have arrived at Dr. Briggs's office, where she laid on a couch and remained till after 5:30, when the doctor returned. The time between 2 and 3:30 is not accounted for.

The object of the defence is to show that Dr. Briggs did not see Miss Taggett until nearly 6 p. m. February 24, whereas the State asserts that he treated her previous to that time.

Mrs. Belle Wesley for the State has testified that Dr. Briggs told her that he had treated Miss Taggett in the forenoon of February 24.

Mrs. Wesley, who was held in $1,000 as a witness in the case, is now under bond, although it is possible that she may be recalled by the witness stand either for the defence or in rebuttal by the State. While there is a possibility that she may world at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon when he passed over the side of the incoming liner, Princess Irene, into the arms of a dozen enthusiastic Nebraskans on the tug Eugene F. Moran.

A heavy rain was falling, but it did not dampen the spirits of the hundred "Bryan Home Folk."

"We are Nebraska boys," they roared, and as the returning statesman, his head uncovered, landed on the deck of the tug, that shrill rallying cry of the plains ripped across the bay, drowning out the bellowing of the fleet of river craft that had gone down to join in the welcome.

An instant later Bryan was swallowed up in the crowd on the Moran. And was none indeed.

Generously Let Him Go.

The Nebraskans didn't let him go until he had shaken hands with everyone on board and heard the news from his home town. Then he was generously permitted to go aboard the yacht Illini. It had been planned that Mr. Bryan should spend the night on the Illini and land in New York city at 4 o'clock this afternoon, but at the last minute the plans were changed, and instead, after cruising about for an hour, the yacht put into Stapleton, S. I., where Mr. and Mrs. Bryan landed and went to the residence of Lewis Nixon.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryan were the guests of Mr. Nixon at dinner last night, and remained until after midnight, when they again boarded the Illini, on which they will remain until it is time to proceed with the original programme this afternoon.

More enthusiastic welcome no returning traveller could wish for. Several cities quarreled over the honor of Homer's birth. Seven rings yesterday celebrated the return of Mr. Bryan's presence, and seven Mayors from Nebraska came all the way to New York to welcome him.

Mighty Clamor of Welcome.

Whistles were tooted, bells rung, hats and handkerchiefs waved, and several hundred lusty-lunged Democrats filled their throats with voices in a mighty cheer as the well-known face of the Nebraska statesman was observed for the first time during the triumphal trail of the Princess Irene for a sight of a friendly face.

When finally caught the eye of Mayor Jesse Dahlman of Omaha, who was frantically waving the same old white hat in the breeze, Mr. Bryan's face broke into a broad smile. His two arms went out in welcome, and pandemonium took loose.

Incidentally, the "home folk" made their presence "felt" in the official program. Sweeping aside all reserve, they boarded the tug, and taking Bryan gently by the arm, led him from the bank to their own boat, while the revenue cutter, with some policemen on board, and the police boat with a few more, and the yacht Illini with still others stood belligerently by and allowed the Nebraskans to have their own way.

Dahlman Had His Lariat Handy.

In case of need "Jesse" Dahlman was there with his lariat. Fortunately for him as it turned out; but after "Will," as they all call Mr. Bryan, had been greeted all around and a few "Home, Sweet Homes" had been sung and Mr. Bryan had received flowers two great bunches of "Nebraska Beauties"—from Mayor "Jesse" Dahlman, from the deck of the tug, declaimed "Speed" Bryan, who was standing on the deck of another, and the bay was ruffled with another cheer.

"Well ringed," cried Bryan, in the lingo of the plains.

"Well rung sank you into the White House in the same way," roared the crowd.

Health Officer Allowed on Board.

As a concession to constituted authority, the Nebraskans permitted the doctor to go aboard the Princess Irene, as his duty was disposed of quickly, whereupon Lewis Nixon and Mayor Brown of Lincoln went over side. Customs officers had already been placed on board the Golden Rule.

Nebraska got busy once more. The Eugene Moran was run close up to the side of the ship, and O'Brien, the barber, with both arms full of flowers, made a deftly leap to the side of the ship, reached up it by a hair's breadth, and an instant later was at the rail again with the guest of honor at his side.

No one knows just how it was managed; no one cares. Bryan appeared to be willing. As quickly as possible his baggage was thrown on the deck of the tug, and Mr. and Mrs. Bryan was helped over. The decks of the two Nebraska tugs were swarming with leaping, howling, cheering men.

"Jump, Will, jump," they cried.

Photograph by Official Photograph er of the Nebraska delegation during visit of the "Home Folks" to W. R. Hearst at the Calvo House.

Bryan took a couple of steps and then gladly followed his wife over the side of the ship. Mayor Dahlman caught him in his arms and embraced him for an instant; half a dozen others followed suit; he was lifted heavily to port as the gang plank used for their leader. A score of cameras were snapped in succession, there was a ringing cheer, and the Eugene F. Moran was hitched to the John C. Moran, swung away from the liner with the prize on board and off to the right the Illini and the police boats, the revenue cutter and the private yacht gasped steam in their astonishment. On the Eugene Moran, Bryan, in the centre of the group, was shaking half a dozen hands at once, exchanging "howdies" with half a dozen more, and listening to flattering praises from still another half dozen. Mrs. Bryan, in the pilot house, was the centre of another group. They got it up for half an hour. And the Illini stood off in chagrin, awaiting the pleasure of the men on the tug.

When he had shaken hands a score of times with everyone on the Eugene Moran, Mr. Bryan crossed to the Julia C. Moran and held another reception, and then he went to the top deck, and the inevitable demand for a speech was made. He responded. And, short though it was, it carried the crowd going once more, and the cheers rolled across the bay and were echoed back by the waving hats and handkerchiefs of the crowds that filled the piers and the bank, for their own homes and factories as long as the pace is reasonable, but the differ

Mrs. Bryan, his daughter, remained on board the Princess Irene, and upon her arrival at Hoboken was driven to the Hotel Victoria, in Manhattan, where she will await the arrival of her parents late this afternoon.

NEW ENGLAND MEN WELCOME BRYAN HOME

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—The Boston contingent that is to attend the Bryan reception arrived yesterday afternoon on the way over District-Attorney Moran boarded the tug and welcomed Bryan.

He said a long and cordial welcome to the Hon. George Fred Williams. Others on the train interested in Bryan's reception and its corollary political incidents were Colonel J. J. Drinkwater, Philip J. Doherty, E. F. Brady and Felix W. McGettrick. Colonel William A. Gaston was in the motor-car and casually surveyed the scene, although his primary errand was distinctly of a business nature.

Ex-Lieutenant-Governor Crockett of Thomaston, the Democratic leader of Knox County, the only Democratic county in Maine, has been here for a day or two, and George E. Hughes of Bath is expected. At 10 o'clock Congressman Keliher arrived, accompanied with Mayor Casey of Lowell and Dick Field, acting secretary to Mayor Fitzgerald. The Mayor came on the midnight train, and ex-Mayor McNamee of Cambridge was with him.

suggest was done for the young man. His quarters were refitted, and he was given every comfort, but he remained feverish and excited, as well as extremely nervous.

He was continually asking when he could get out of the hospital. His condition became alarming, and Dr. Hornby, superintendent of the hospital, went to his room and had a talk with him.

"I am to be married on the 29th of this month in Boston, and hundreds of invitations have been issued, Mr. Swan said; "you can appreciate the embarrassment it will cause if I am not there."

Dr. Hornby assured him there was no possibility of his being able to leave the hospital so soon, and Mr. Swan asked if it could not be arranged so that he could be married in the hospital.

"I'll see the head nurse," the superintendent answered.

Wedding in Staff Room.

"The staff room is the very place. Mrs. Tully, the head nurse, said. It can be fixed up nicely for a wedding.

The staff room is the meeting place of the physicians and surgeons. Mr. Swan communicated with Miss Wood. She agreed. The medical books, text tubes, anatomical charts and everything suggesting medicine and surgery were taken out of the room, and in their places were arranged an altar, palms, orchids and cut flowers.

Mr. Swan is thirty-one years old and lives at No. 128 West Forty-third street, in the Carlton Apartments. He is a son of J. Benjamin Swan, of Tecumseh, Mich., a retired miner and millionaire.

Mr. Swan's mother and father came to from Michigan, and Miss Wood, accompanied by her mother and father, arrived at the hospital about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Swan had been placed on a comfortable stretcher and invalid chair and carried to the staff room.

Ceremony by Friends' Pastor.

Surrounded by Drs. Hornby, Chas. LaMotte, Lutton, Day and Gardner and Mrs. Tully, Mr. Swan and Miss Wood were married according to the ceremony of the Society of Friends, both being Quakers. James Wood, of Westchester, who is not related to the bride, acted as minister.

Mrs. Swan has taken a room next to that occupied by her husband, and will assist the nurses in caring for him. The doctors say he must remain in the hospital for a month or more.

Mr. Swan is a civil engineer and is connected with the Bankers' Investment Company, with offices opposite the Waldorf Hotel.

SCENE DURING TRIAL IN BANGOR COURTROOM

Belle Wesley, Chief Witness.

the rooms of Mrs. Belle M. Wesley, No. 130 Main street, Bangor, on the night of March 1 last. Arthur E. Rosie, who had been her escort on nearly every occasion for several months previous to that time, gave the girl $225 and sent her to Bangor, where, it was later alleged, $200 of the money was given to Dr. Briggs.

Dr. Briggs was called in to treat the young woman after her arrival in Bangor. It is alleged. Later Dr. Charles H. McCurdy, an equally prominent physician, saw the girl. She died on the night of March 1, and the case was at once reported to the coroner of Penobscot County.

The coroner's jury which investigated the circumstances surrounding the death of pretty Maud Taggett found that she had died of blood poisoning superinduced by illegal treatment, for which Dr. Briggs was held as responsible.

Said He Gave Doctor Money.

At the coroner's inquest the principal witness against Briggs was Arthur E. Rosie, the dead girl's friend. He told of giving her money to go to Bangor. Mrs. Belle M. Wesley, at whose house the girl had died, was also a witness.

Mrs. Wesley comes from Newtonville, Mass. Her father's name is A. C. McIntyre. He is in business at Nos. 26 and 28 Chimney street, Boston. The family is one of prominence in Newtonville. Mrs. Wesley was graduated from the Newton High School eight years ago, when she was eighteen years of age. At no time was she accused during any of the investigations or hearings of having had any criminal connection or knowledge of the case.

Dr. Briggs was arraigned on a charge of manslaughter in the Municipal Court before Judge Chapman on March 2, the day after the girl died, and was held in $2,000 bail for the August term of the Penobscot County Court on a charge of manslaughter. In the illegal treatment performed on Miss Maud B. Taggett of Masardis, Mrs. Belle M. Wesley was held in $1,000 bail, and Arthur E. Rosie in $1,000 bail as witnesses for the prosecution in the case.

At the hearing Dr. Briggs pleaded not guilty, but Judge Chapman, under the evidence of young Rosie and Mrs. Wesley, found probable cause. When the grand jury was convened a true bill was found, and the charge changed to murder, and Dr. Briggs was again arrested.

Made Sensational Arrest.

On the instance of each arrest the officers, when they entered Dr. Briggs's office, found it full of patients awaiting treatment. The first arrest which took place on the morning of March 2 was sensational. The warrant was made out soon after the coroner's jury had found its verdict and Chief of Police White entered the office, which was filled with patients, and led their physician away from them.

When arraigned on the charge of murder under the instance of District Attorney Sutton, Judge Louis C. Stearns, senior counsel for the prisoner, objected to this, characterizing it as a "high-handed outrage on the part of the prosecuting officer

MRS. MAGGIE DAILEY; SKETCH OF ACCIDENT.

Girl Aeronaut Sees Her Plight and Pulls Safety Cord. Victim Badly Hurt in Landing.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Aug. 30.—Caught by the anchor of a balloon and carried 500 feet up in the air over the heads of 5,000 spectators, a Mrs. Roper of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has been spending the Summer in Ulster county, was seriously but not fatally hurt yesterday at the Ulster county fair at Ellenville.

Maggie Dailey of Middletown, N. Y., who has been making daily ascensions at the fair grounds in a hot air balloon, had just entered the car and was about to give the order to cast off when the balloon broke loose and sailed upward with the anchor trailing.

Before the bystanders could scatter the anchor flute caught in Mrs. Roper's dress and she was whipped upward screaming.

The weight of the anchor rope caused the balloon to tip over, and Miss Dailey looking over the car saw her unwilling fellow voyager swinging far below at the end of the rope, and at once pulled the safety cord.

The balloon, which by that time had gone up 500 feet, quickly descended and reached ground a quarter of a mile from the start.

Mrs. Roper struck the ground heavily, and when picked up was found to be unconscious. Her shoulder and several fingers were broken.

HETTY GREEN PAY $1.50 TO SEE A SHOW? OH FUDGE!

Press Agent Startles Wall Street With Rumor That Noted Financier Has Become a Spendthrift.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Wall street suffered a terrible shock this morning by a rumor, possibly started by a theatre press agent, that Mrs. Hetty Green had forsaken her conservatism and become a spendthrift.

The street was informed and believed that America's greatest woman financier so far violated all the precepts which have made her famous as to give up $1.50 in real money to witness a Broadway musical comedy. As the story goes Mrs. Green or a woman who was her double, and two elderly women friends appeared at the theatre in question shortly after 8 o'clock and asked for three tickets. The box office laid down three paste boards and said: "Six dollars."

"Six dollars," exclaimed the prospective purchaser. "I could not give that for your whole show. How about those 50-cent seats you advertise?"

"Certainly," replied the treasurer, lying down three peanut gallery admission tickets, which the woman picked up and paid.

A number of people in the gallery are said to have recognized Mrs. Green.

TO FIGHT UNION WITH UNIONISM

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 30.—The first sign that the street car men's union was ready to make peace came to-day when the union officers submitted a proposal to the United Railroads, agreeing to return to work at once if the demand for $3 a day was granted, and then submit to arbitration the question of hours.

This proposition was drawn out by the statement of President Calhoun of the company, who said he would fight the union with unionism. He said he would import over 2,000 men as permanent employes. Of these men a new union would be formed. Calhoun said the company would spend $250,000 in the fight with the present union.

FITZGERALD CLUB DECLARES FOR MORAN

Ward 22 Organization Also Indorses Peters for Congress and Sullivan for Senate

VIGOROUS SPEECH BY KOPP

John B. Moran was unanimously and enthusiastically indorsed for Governor by the John F. Fitzgerald Club of Ward 22 last evening at a meeting in the Columbus avenue and Centre street headquarters. The club also indorsed the candidacy of Former Senator Andrew J. Peters for Congress in the Eleventh district and that of John F. Sullivan of Roxbury for the Senate from the Seventh district.

John A. Kopp, a member of the Democratic State Committee and candidate for re-election from Ward 22, in a vigorous speech which he declared for Moran and for the ownership of public utilities, was applauded by the following resolution, which was adopted amid rousing cheers:

"Return Power to People."

"Resolved, that the John F. Fitzgerald Club of Ward 22, in meeting assembled, believe that the time has arrived for a change in the administration of the affairs of Massachusetts; that the affairs of government should be taken from the political bosses and returned to the people, to whom it rightfully belongs.

"The rank and file of the Democratic party in this State, especially the workingmen, are opening their eyes to the plundering methods of political bosses and grafters, and are turning to the Democratic party.

"It is our duty as Democrats of Ward 22 who have the best interests of our ward at heart to make a stand for honesty and integrity in the administration of public affairs, to formulate an honest platform and nominate candidates who are known to vigorously represent and enforce the laws of the Commonwealth, without fear or favor.

"People Want Moran."

"We believe that no better or safer man could be found as the Democratic candidate for Governor than John B. Moran, fearless in his duty, he has gained the confidence, good will and respect of the people.

"The people want him for Governor, and we, the Democrats of Ward 22, indorse him as our choice for the Governor of the State of Massachusetts."

After the endorsement of Peters for Congress and Sullivan for Senate, President James McCarthy appointed Dennis Campbell a committee of one to wait on those gentlemen and escort them to the hall. Both candidates addressed the meeting. Mr. Sullivan strongly advocated municipal ownership of public utilities and the nomination and election of John B. Moran to the Governorship, while former Senator Peters confined himself to a discussion of tariff revision and Canadian reciprocity.

John A. Kopp, the club's candidate for the Democratic nomination for the House, is well and favorably known in trade union circles of the city, having been a member of Typographical Union, No. 13, for over twenty years. Mr. Kopp has the unanimous indorsement of the labor element of Ward 22.

Medicated Kisses by Cautious Misses Latest Fad in Courtship's Blisses

You Hear a "Faze" (in the Dark, of Course), Thats You Get It.

Girl, Should Spray Their Ruby Lips With Carbolic Antiseptic.

Here's a new cure for all kinds of "kissing bugs": A carbolic antiseptic atomizer, to be used before and after osculation by the twentieth century girl. Built in handy form, it can be easily concealed when not in use.

Imagine the young man—or imagine yourself waiting and wishing for those few parting kisses. Sitting at the other end of the sofa, with the gas turned down, you are startled by a flat-fizz, followed by a gasp from your sweetheart.

Then she turns upon you, really expectant, but the perfumes of the Orient have suddenly turned into an odor resembling a dairy barn after the cattle inspectors have finished their war on the hoof and mouth disease. There are two guesses for you. Either she has been eating garlic or she has a cracking toothache and is using creosote.

The only way to do is to take the kisses and get your medicine with it.

Then there are the trials of the girls. Alice wouldn't see the fun if George should come in just after she had broken the atomizer.

Out in Cleveland, Dr. Burlek N. Roark, president of the Kentucky normal schools, has been telling the teachers that this atomizer is bound to come. The only way to dodge the death-dealing microbes, he says, is to use an atomizer first, go ahead with the kissing, and then with the atomizer, and so on.

WOMEN TO TAKE PART IN GREAT LABOR PARADE

A large army of working women have come to the front and volunteered to take a prominent part in the big Labor Day parade next Monday. This decision was made last night at a meeting of the Laundry Workers' Union, held in Wells Memorial Hall.

On the committee of arrangements are Misses Lida McFeeters, Annie Sullivan and Katherine Riordon, who have planned for a large float to carry all the women members of the union. The float will be heavily draped with the national colors and drawn by six dapple gray horses. On the side of the float the union label will be displayed.

The Laundry Workers' float will be followed by a big tally-ho carrying the members of the Cigar Factory Strippers' Union. The cheering will be lead by President Miss Bessie Jacobs. There are to be two other floats, bearing Division No. 13 of the Woman's Auxiliary, Typographical Union, and Workers of the Municipal Printing plant.

All the women are to be dressed in white and will carry flags, and at the head of each float three young women will carry aloft a banner emblematic of labor.

The officers of the Laundry Workers' Union are: President, Katherine Riordan; vice president, Grace Curran; secretary, Mary Keough; treasurer, George E. Knights.

The national government should feed all poor children. The Countess of Warwick says their dietary is the nation's concern. A most spirited plea by one of the most beautiful of the British aristocracy and King Edward's personal friend. In next SUNDAY'S BOSTON AMERICAN.

"NOT YET, BUT SOON" IS LATEST COMEDY

LYNN, Aug. 30. Hap Ward began his season here last evening in the most amusing musical comedy he has ever had, with the old name of "Not Yet, But Soon," a compliment to the phrase originated by the BOSTON AMERICAN'S cartoonist. The Lynn Theatre was crowded and Mr. Ward, who played the role of Bill Nerve, and Lucy Daly as the chicken girl have very novel characters. The company opens the Globe Theatre season at Boston next Monday.

WONDERLAND TO HAVE NOVEL INCUBATOR DAY

Graduates of Infant Institution to Gather at Electric City September Sixth.

There will be great doings at Wonderland, the electric city by the sea at Revere Beach on Thursday, the sixth day of September.

Not that there are not great things doing there every day perish the lot, but on Thursday, September 6, has been set aside as the day upon which the graduates of the Infant Incubator in all parts of the Eastern States shall congregate, and in congress assembled shall discuss the vital topics of the current hour. It is known that in all Wonderland and Revere Beach there is no more interesting, educating and well patronized attraction than the Infant Incubator institute. The cosy little building itself is sufficiently attractive to draw the crowd. Somehow it looks more permanent and "couly" than the others. The gentleman in attendance, the white capped and prissy gowned maids, and the motherly looking matron all seem to add an attractive appearance to the place. Sure is, the Infant Incubators are strong attractions at Wonderland, but Thursday, the first week of September, will be the red letter day of the institution.

Manager Egan, who presides over the destinies of the institute, has declared that on that day the congress of incubator graduates will be held and he issued a proclamation to the effect yesterday. This means that on the day designated, every infant that has been cured to date in the institute at Wonderland, at the two expositions in the Mechanics' Building in Boston, and at the Eastern Exhibitions at which Infant Incubator Institutes have been established, will be in attendance at the congress.

Mothers will be there as guides and chaperones, but the babies will really be the main attraction. There will be about twenty-five "delegates from Boston, and an equal number from places in Massachusetts outside of the capital. Invitations to attend the congress have been extended to baby graduates all over New England, and it is likely that the assemblage will be a large and enthusiastic one.

The idea of such a congress of incubator graduates is not entirely new. It has been carried out successfully on two or three other occasions. The scheme was originally consummated by William A. Walsh, who is at present the promoter of publicity at Wonderland. Mr. Walsh was formerly connected with the incubator institute at Luna Park and Dreamland, Coney Island, New York, and he first started the infant congress movement, which was carried to a successful conclusion.

At the congress to be held at Wonderland next week, any graduate from an infant incubator institute will be eligible for a seat in the convention, it matters not whether they were in the institutes at the Omaha exposition, the Lewis & Clark exposition at Portland, Oregon, the Coney Island amusement resorts or at the Mechanics' Building expositions. All are welcome and all are invited.

The congress will continue through the day and the headquarters will be established and maintained at the Infant Incubator Building. It is expected that the delegates will have weighty discussions to dispose of and the debates promise to be interesting. It is expected that leading gentleman from Luna will debate upon "The Parasite Value of the Auxiliary Regulations of the Supply, Distribution and Consumption of Lacteal Fluids," and another delegate promises an interesting session on "The Origin, Progress and Attainments of Rattles, and the Benefits derived Therefrom."

As a convention, this assembly will certainly outpace anything else that ever happened in a similar line. Of course, the "kids" will be allowed to stand up in the spectators' gallery, and their sighs and groans from Luna is usually experienced at one of those old-fashioned one-ring circuses that our grand daddies are so fond of telling us about.

START INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE WITH CHEERS IN FALL RIVER

THOMAS E. FINNERTY PETER J. O'MALLEY

PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY OF THE CLINTON INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE

Mr. Flunerty is the chief executive officer and Mr. O'Malley secretary of the new branch of the Independence League of Massachusetts that has been formed with the most promising outlook for future growth in Clinton.

Special to the Boston Americans.

FALL RIVER, Aug. 30.—"This is the line for a movement to rescue the people from the powers that now exploit them, and the Independence League is the movement for the time."

Thus epigrammatically, Dr. Charles E. Crockett, in a speech that burned with fervor and aroused enthusiastic applause, expressed the sentiment of the citizens gathered at a mass meeting in Mule Spinners' Hall last night to form a local branch of the Independence League of Massachusetts.

Earnestness was the prevailing temper of the meeting, during which the league was formed with an initial roll of fifty-one members and provisional officers were elected. The meeting was the outcome of a smaller gathering held a week ago, at which President Matthew J. Maloney of the Central Labor Union presided. At that time it was voted to meet for organization last evening and to invite the public to attend. The big A. O. H. celebration in town, which held many on the streets that would otherwise have been indoors, undoubtedly prevented the attendance of scores who would otherwise have been at the meeting. In fact, many of those present said that friends who were unable to attend would come later and certainly affiliate with the league.

A number of prominent labor leaders of Fall River were among the attendants and participants. Before proceeding to the work of organization the meeting listened with great interest and frequent applause to an address by E. Gerry Brown of Brockton, a member of the State executive committee of the league. Mr. Brown, who is also chairman of the committee of fifteen of the Wage Earners' Clubs of Massachusetts, received a welcome that showed his popularity in Fall River, and his speech was often interrupted by loud and continued hand-clapping.

Mr. Brown reviewed the history of popular independent movements in the United States and showed how the will of the people had time and again been circumvented by the trickery of corrupt political machines.

"I hope and pray," he said, "for the day when the independent movement that is sweeping the country will have a balance of power at Washington, and that its Congressmen will stand firm as Parnell and say to those of the parties who seek their votes: 'Not an iota shall we lodge until you give to the people of the country the rights that have been taken away.'"

Dr. Charles E. Crockett, in a ringing address, expressed his sympathy with the Independence League and his intention to work for its success. He said among other things: "The working people of America, ground by the machine of one party, look to the other for relief and do not find it. They are flattered in both but helped by neither. The time is ripe for a great independent movement, and I am sure this Independence League is the movement for the time. No organization can succeed without great leaders and I rejoice that this league numbers among its friends and leaders that great educator and worker for the public good, William Randolph Hearst. I am with this organization heart and soul and I shall live to see it triumphant."

Other speakers voiced similar sentiments, and a provisional organization was finally affected by the choice of John A. Gardner as president and Dr. Arthur Maynard as secretary. Each of these officers spoke, expressing his confidence in the ultimate success of the League.

It was voted that the president and secretary be a committee to consult prominent citizens in each ward who desire to be members, and to recommend names at a meeting to be held next Wednesday evening, an executive committee.

"Fall River will have a strong league of citizens that I feel sure," said President Gardner after the meeting. "It will do as valuable work as it did in the days of the 'flying wedges' and the whole State knows what that means.

BIG FOUNTAIN A HIT AT NEW JAYNES STORE

One of Most Complete Drug Stores in Country Opened in Washington Street.

Boston may be the Hub of the Universe and the centre of all culture, the home of the "Codfish and the Cabot" and the premier place of higher thought. But these things do not prevent it from having the soda habit acutely.

This is shown by the importance given by up-to-date druggists to the soda water department of their establishments. The new store of Jaynes & Company have just opened on Washington street, on the northeast corner of Bedford street, gives its soda water patrons a prominence that is a telling illustration of how Boston recognizes the delectable nature of ice cream chocolate, the soothing college ice and the other myriad forms of soda fountain product. This fountain is forty feet long, one of the largest, if not the largest in the city. It is a handsome marble affair fitted with the latest devices in apparatus and ornamented by five broad plate mirrors at the back. A large corps of clerks is ever busy attending to the various wants of customers.

This new store makes the fifth in the Jaynes chain of Boston pharmacies. Such has the Jaynes trade grown from a small beginning twenty-five years ago.

In addition to its striking soda fountain equipment, the establishment is unusually complete in every other respect. The drug department is, of course, as scientific and accurate as possible. Competent chemists, graduates of the best schools in their profession, are in charge. Is your sweet tooth? There is the candy counter with all sorts of bonbons, candies, special sweetmeats and other "goodies," sold by pretty young girls. There are also two bevys of white lawn which the girls wear in their hair give a picturesque touch to their generally attractive effect.

Here and the staff of men and women clerks, busily dispensing goods, make a visit to the store interesting, if just for sight-seeing alone.

CLUB TELLS FIGHTERS TO QUIT "KIDDING"

GOLDFIELD, Nev., Aug. 30.—The directors of the Goldfield Athletic Club to-day announced that they would allow neither Joe Gans nor Battling Nelson to bring forward any more points for discussion that would threaten the holding of the fight on Labor Day. Tex Rickard, speaking for the Board of Directors, said that every matter of dispute had now been settled, and that any further questions would have to be submitted to Referee George Siler for settlement.

This stand had to be taken because both fighters have been showing a disposition to dig up entangling matters which the club officials believe will hurt the sale of tickets. Gans had only finished up his dispute concerning the honesty of Siler as referee when Billy Nolan, acting for Nelson, came along with a complaint. Nolan was evidently surprised because the club had revoked the ringside weight with such slight authority, and after mucking his active brain, had found food for quite a stir.

The constant quibbling of the fighters has left the miners in no pleasant temper. At a discussion which took place in one of the prominent hostelries several of the fight promoters were present, and developed that if Gans and Nelson did not enter the ring on Labor Day their forfeits would not only be confiscated, but the two would be run out of the town at the point of the pistol if necessary. In the case of the first fight Nolan was deemed the quibbler and generally condemned.

Dane's Manager Explains.

Nolan's contention that Gans would have to weigh in at the ringside in fighting costume was based on the following argument:

"I don't want Gans to do anything that Nelson is not willing to do. All championship fights are governed by rules and regulations, and here is one fight in which the rules will be lived up to. This contest is to be decided according to Marquis of Queensberry rules. In said rules it is set forth that in any point not provided the London prize ring rules must apply. The London prize ring rules set forth that the men must weigh just as they are to fight. I don't see that Siler or any other authority is more capable of settling this thing than I am. The rules must be the sole guide. I feel I am right, and when I feel that way I am not to be swayed."

Naughton's View of Case.

W. W. Naughton, the fight writer, undertook to show that Nolan was quibbling in the following analysis of the London prize ring rules:

"While agreeing with the sporting body generally that the manager of a prize fighter is not to be censured for keeping in view the title saying, 'A match well made is a match half won,' and acting accordingly, I think I can show where Nolan has not a leg to stand upon in this particular wrangle.

"To begin with, by my memory serves me, one of the first rules governing championship events is that the men must box in a ring twenty-four feet square. In this fight Nolan demanded an eighteen-foot ring, and the smaller enclosure is provided for in the articles. Nelson's manager reckons that curtailed fighting space is a big advantage to a break-neck, aggressive slugger like the Durable Dane, and he gained his point. But in fighting in an eighteen-foot ring living up to the championship rules?

Mistake in Rules.

"Another clause of the rules bearing upon bets says that all bets shall be paid in the stake, or wards to that effect. This was framed up in the days when fighters looked for so much a side, and applied to latter day fighting it means, I take it, bets shall be paid as the purse is paid. If this rule is strictly lived up to in the coming fight, all bets must be paid in Nelson's favor whether Gans defeats him or not, for Nelson has already been awarded the Dane's share of the purse.

"To be perfectly frank, the articles of agreement are of such a character that I should think Nolan would regret having that would lead to their dissection. If championship fights the object of all agreements and rules should be to guarantee through fair play, an opportunity to each man to prove he is the best in the world by his claim, and to make provision for his receiving the winner's award. If some of the dead and gone prize ring heroes could get a glimpse of the Gans-Nelson articles and read where Nelson is to get two-thirds of the plunder, win or lose, they would turn over in their graves."

Joe Gans Is the Class, but Conditions May Beat Him, So

BERGER PICKS NELSON TO WIN

BY TAD.

Sam Berger, the California heavyweight, is the candy dopist if you want a hot tip.

I saw Sam the other day doing five miles along the Coney Island Way, and, stopping in a nearby lowcream resort, got the great end line of bull on a fight that I ever heard.

"Who do I think will win?" answered the quinty-eyed Westerner, tossing each word and reaching over toward the lunch. "Well, I say Nelson."

I started to pelt a few more questions at him, but he had his left up to an interjaculatory position, stopped my chirp, and rattled off again at a great rate.

"Listen, Baden, I'm not saying that Battling Nelson is a greater fighter than Joe Gans. Don't misunderstand me. I pick Nelson because he has the best of the conditions.

"Joe Gans is as far above all the other lightweights in the world as I am above Major Berger, and, in my opinion, WAS the grandest two-hundred fighter we have ever seen.

"THIS battle I look upon as I would a great horse race. I might know one horse to be better than another. Understand? He might have qualities that the other horse were shy on, but the conditions I were against him. He is not a mudder; he is carrying too much weight; he has a poor jockey, and so forth. Do you get that? Well, I look to Nelson now because he will be stronger; he is an aggressive fighter, and even the high altitude is in his favor. Gans never fought a battle where he will be as light as in this one. Listen! He weighs 133 now, well, he will be nearly lighter than that Monday when he enters the ring, and he cannot be so strong as Nelson at the figure. His wallop won't be the same; he won't be as fast on his feet, and his strength will fade round by round.

"You know, I suppose, that fighters lose a great deal of weight during a battle, don't you? Very often it was a hard matter to get seventy pounds he will lose from three to six pounds. Well, figure it this way: At Goldfield, in the high altitude, you will lose weight easier than in any other fight town. If they fight over 130 pounds, Gans will be below 130 pounds, and the longer it goes the lighter and weaker he will be.

"It's just so I say.

"I look upon the day as the class in a big race, but he is in bad, if he fails to drop the Dane between six or eight rounds I don't figure him to run one, two, six at the thing.

"Now, I wouldn't bet a million dollars on it, I think the thing worth a proposition. It's merely my opinion of the fight, and one opinion is not going to change the battle any. Nelson, a good, strong boy, figures to win by a head."

BOSTON AND NEW YORK SPORTS TIP GANS TO BEAT NELSON IN BOUT AT GOLDFIELD

As in New York Joe Gans is the favorite with the majority of local fight fans, as the following opinions will show:

Larry Lajoie—I think that Joe Gans will win the fight, but I think that he will have to go about twenty rounds in order to do so. Nelson is a pretty tough customer, and Gans will have to be hardest rusk in his ring career to beat him. I am afraid that Gans will have great difficulty in making 133 pounds, but he says he can easily do it, and I guess he is the one that ought to know.

Elmer Flick—I don't know very much about the boxing game, but from what accounts I have read of the fight, I should think that Nelson, because of his youth and record, should get the honors.

Ed Buslow—To me it looks like Gans in a walk. He is clever, a great ring general and has the reach and punch.

Pitcher Jones—I have a few dollars that I am going to place on Nelson. The Dane is a prime strong.

"Topsy" Turner—I don't see anything to it but Gans. I don't, as a rule, like to see a colored champ, but Gans is a pretty white sort of a fellow, and besides has fighting ability.

Chick Stahl—Judging by the reports I have read from the training camps, and the previous records of the two fighters, if I were still in the level I think that Gans will beat Nelson.

Cy Young—The Dane for mine. I can't see Gans at all.

George Winter—It should be a good, hard mill, but I look to see Gans, because of his greater experience, beat the Dane.

Hobe Ferris—I pick Gans to win.

Parent—It's a tossup, but Gans, if he is in shape, should win.

Aleck Griggsby—Gans looks a winner to me.

Johnny Murphy—Gans should beat the battler.

Tom Duggen—Nelson is younger and will win.

Eddie Hobbs—Gans for mine. He knows the game.

Billy Pierce—The Smoke is a good bet; safe bet.

Jack Smith—Nelson should win by a knockout.

Dee McKenna—Nelson is due to get licked by Gans.

Johnny McGann—Gans looks good to me.

Bennie Driscoll—The Dane is the real goods in this fight.

Jack McClusky—The Battler will put it on Black Joe.

Joe Wilson—Nelson is my choice.

Jerry Cullinane—Nelson seems like a good short end bet.

Tis Hurst—It looks like Gans to me.

Johnny Noonan—The Dane is up against it with Gans.

NEW YORK SPORTS THINK GANS WILL BE THE WINNER

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—New York fight fans almost to a man pick Gans to win at Goldfield on Labor Day. Here are a few of the opinions:

Tim Hayes—I get a name. It comes before me, but I can't make it out. For more information you can write me at my house.

John Considine—Nothing to it but the negro all the way.

George Considine—Gans for mine. It's a tip.

Hal Masterson—All the figures say Gans and not a chance for Nelson.

Sam Bernard—Why, I'd bet as much money as the pick Mr. Hoggenheimer I'd bet it all on the smoke.

Peter Dailey—Split kiddity. There's only one man in the fight as far as I can see, and he's a mighty black one.

Joe Keagan—It's all over now except paying off on Gans.

Tom Tilforde—It's in Gans by a city block.

Jim Corbett—I'd like to see Nelson win, but it doesn't look as though he could on paper.

Honest John Kelly—Gans from the first tap of the bell until the finish, which will come quickly. I have just had a wire from Gans, telling me to get a small bet down on him.

Dick Bernard—Nothing but Gans.

Ed Rosenbaum—I am backing Gans.

Pat Early—I've trained with both boys, and I think Nelson can win. I've seen the referee in fights both boys have had and have watched things carefully.

Walter Kelly—I'll take a chance on Nelson.

Oscar Hammerstein—I'd like to pull it off in the Victoria, and I wouldn't care who won it.

Eddie Pierce—Gans.

Charley Dalton—I'm pulling for Nelson.

Charley Mahoney—I think it looks like Nelson.

Joe Gans—I'll have to give it to Gans this time.

Colonel Mosby—No, sah. I cayrnt pick a nigger to do anything except pick cotton, sah.

Frank Johnston—I'm betting $1500 on Gans against $1200.

Sol Epperly—Bet I've got the other end of that bet.

Billy Gould—I'll take my chances with Gans.

George Cohan—I'm busy picking people for 45 shows right now, and they all look like winners.

MANY AUTOISTS TOURING IN THE WOODS

BY J. C. KERRISON.

The first of the 1907 water-cooled Premiers to arrive in this city was received by G. C. Squire at his Massachusetts avenue establishment yesterday. The car in its general appearance resembles in no small degree its air-cooled sister, models of which were also received. The advent of the water cooled Premier gives the followers of that car an opportunity to select either one or the other, air cooled or water cooled. Mechanically the difference between the two cars is in the cylinders, one being copper jacketed and the other being air cooled. Other than that there is no difference whatever, the valves being in the same place, the power the same, the carburetter, transmission, and, in fact, every portion being interchangeable. The car can be converted into either an air or water cooled proposition by the substitution of one set of cylinders for the other. The car makes a striking appearance, and will cause a sensation.

The popularity of Bretton Woods with the motorists is emphasized by the large number of tourists always to be found there. The record day was Sunday last, when divided between the two houses, the Mount Washington and the Mount Pleasant, there were no less than 824 guests. Most extraordinary was the number of motor vehicles to be found there then, this numbering no less than forty-nine, including the following well known: Dr. and Mrs. W. M. Polk and F. L. Ross of Boston in a Packard, Colonel and Mrs. Frank E. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. Fred I. Woods in a Napier, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. L. W. Russell of West Newton in a Cadillac, and Mr. and Mrs. Kneeland and Miss Kneeland of Boston in a Packard, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kneeland, Jr. and Mrs. Harold Kneeland of Dorchester in a Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Hipley of Wilmington in a Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Sargent of Boston in a Rainer, Mrs. C. C. Burt, Mrs. E. M. Farnsworth, Miss E. M. Farnsworth and Miss Katherine Hoyt of Brookline in a Stoddard-Dayton, Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Mayo and Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Sutton of Burlington in a Columbia and Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Josslin and Mrs. M. Miller of Providence in a Packard.

BROOKLYN, Aug. 30.—There's a new puzzle going the rounds. It's being sold at every ball park, in trains, and all the local places. The only trouble with it is there's no answer. "Where would Boston be if Lindy didn't have a set of fine pitchers?" The only answer so far is: "Because they aren't signed a year, and a state of decay is in terrors for them."

The same mileage with at least three regulars out of their positions prevailed in yesterday's game. Imagine the attraction to the fans here the Boosevaltes, crippled, rheumatic, sore, travel-stained and rank. The Boston—fall-leaders, half a team and without a chance to win. To add to this, rain helped to keep the fans at home. Altogether it was the poorest attended game of the season.

HARVARD CREW GETS BETTER EACH DAY

PUTNEY, Aug. 30.—Because they have not yet equalled the time of the American in going over the regular course here the Canada have placed an order with Sims Bros. for a new shell, which must be completed in five days. This has caused great comment everywhere, and the London papers look upon it as a sign of weakness.

Carch Wray is more pleased with his over each day. He is positive that his crew will cover the course in the race in considerably less time than it did the other day. Morgan and Flint were not allowed to row at the full stretch in that test, so there is food for reflection in his belief.

Both crews took two spins yesterday. The Cambridge lads were paced both times by the London Rowing Club crew pilot, Dramatic, sore, travel-stained and rank. The Boston—fall-leaders, half a team and without a chance to win. To add to this, rain helped to keep the fans at home. Altogether it was the poorest attended game of the season.

FINE CARD ON AT READVILLE TO-DAY

PROBABLE WINNERS AT READVILLE.

2:11 CLASS—TROTTING.

Mack Mack, first; El Milagro, second; Morone, third.

2:05 CLASS—PACING.

Gratt, first; The Friend, second; Baron Grattan, third.

2:18 CLASS—TROTTING.

Dr. Chase, first; Captain Bacon, second; Budd, third.

Surely there will be enough doing at the Grand Circuit races at Readville this afternoon to interest the most blase fan. The card is as full only as the 2:05 pace on the docket to be fought to a finish, but those in the 2:11 and 2:18 trotting classes scheduled.

In the fast pace will be practically the second dual of the horses that made a new world's pacing record for three consecutive heats last Saturday. With the weather and track just right it must be expected extreme speed will be seen, and it is not too sure but that another world's mark will be set for turf history.

On form it seems Gratt has the best chance to head the summary, though The Friend can always be counted dangerous. Last Saturday's race was the first the Philadelphia stallion had worn the hopples for a couple of years, and, therefore, is reasonable the race must have helped get him in shape to carry his speed still further before calling enough in the homestretch. Baron Grattan and Bolivar are pretty certain to show their hand as strong factors before the race is closed.

Mack Mack should carry away the large slice of the purse in the 2:11 class trot. Next in form comes C. W. Lasell's good gelding El Milagro, while the Montana mare, Morone, will lead the most of the party a merry dance to give her a beating.

WALCOTT TO CHALLENGE WINNER

Joe Walcott will challenge the winner of the Gans-Nelson bout at Goldfield, Nev., and agree to make the 133 pounds required and fight for the championship. Billy Pierce, his manager, declares that Joe can make it and make it without trouble. He says when Walcott and Gans fought their twenty-round draw that Walcott weighed only 135 pounds, although the articles allowed the men to weigh in at 141 pounds at 3 o'clock. It would be remembered that Walcott hurt his left hand in the second of the fight, in trying to bore the ligaments when Jack Johnson was in the sparring pastry blocked off punches with his pointed elbows.

If the sample of baseball put up by the Boston yesterday is any criterion, they will make it hot for all the other teams they encounter the rest of this season. Yesterday, with Criger behind the bat, things had a different complexion, and Vonnie Stack and his tribe, who were looking forward to their visit to the Hub to increase their percentage of games won, will probably be very much disappointed when they tackle the Pilgrims' game.

The Athletics are here for three games, and they will leave Saturday. Chick Stahl and his crew believe they are on their feet once more, and they hope to at least win two games from the Athletics.

The Athletics have taken an awful slump since they were last seen in this city. They have been marks for all the teams down the line, and only recently they lost five straight games to the White Sox, which is a very bad showing for a team that aspires to the championship of the American League.

Waddell and Plank have not been themselves lately, and that is largely the reason of the slump of the Philadelphia aggregation, who earlier in the season held a commanding lead and it was thought would win the flag in a walk.

What Qualities Do Girls Most Admire in a Young Man?

By Beatrice Fairfax

TWO young men have had an argument as to what quality girls most admire in men.

One claims that good looks are most in demand, while the other declares that intellect and manner enjoy the day.

Broadly speaking, both are right. Girls' opinions as to the most admirable qualities in man change as they grow older.

Up to twenty the average girl is irresistibly swayed by good looks.

The good looking man, no matter how stupid he may be, is sure to have any number of girls of that age burning incense at his shrine.

But as the girl grows into the woman she demands more of a man.

Her ideal man is no longer a good looking, well dressed dummy.

She does not demand genius or brilliancy, but she resents intelligence and broad-mindedness.

Of course good looks add materially to the charm of either man or woman, and the fortunate possessor of beauty has much to be thankful for in this.

Women are not such beauty worshippers as men are, and the plain man, if he is manly, honest and strong, has just as many admirers as the Adonis.

There is one quality which all women intensely admire in men and that is physical strength.

But it must not be brute strength; it must be tempered by gentleness.

The strong man who is gentle withal is sure to win his way to the heart of a woman. His strength as compared to her weakness, appeals to her very strongly.

For woman, no matter how strong-minded and independent she may be, cannot love the man whom she does not look up to.

Occasionally you see an Amazon of a woman devoted to some puny, insignificant male, but in such cases the love is more maternal than wifely.

As long as the world lasts there will be those of both sexes who value mere physical beauty above all other qualities. But they are comparatively few and far between.

It would be doing an intelligent woman an injustice to say that she would be content with beauty and nothing else in a man.

A charming, attractive man goes far to make a man popular with women.

Timidity is a quality for which women have absolutely no use.

The man who is afraid to take the lead with women will never get on with them.

To sum the whole situation up, I should say that the average woman is satisfied with the average man.

And the average man is fairly good looking, with a wholesome manly kind of good looks, gentle in his manner toward women, athletic enough to keep himself in good condition, an honest, upright American gentleman.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

VERY YOUNG

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have made the acquaintance of a girl about my own age. We both love each other very much. Now, Miss Fairfax, we are both too young to get married, but I want her for my wife some day. What would you advise me to do to keep her for me in three years? It happened the other day that the subject of eloping came up, and she was willing. But I think we are too young. Please give me the best advice you can, for I am very anxious.

THE only thing and the best thing for you to do is to become engaged and wait for a year or so before you think of marrying. Treat him civilly, but do not put yourself out on his account. Do not let his variable attentions prevent you from making friends with some more satisfactory man.

RATHER UNSATISFACTORY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have known a gentleman for the past three years. During that time the following is the way he has acted: He will call steadily for three months, then I won't see him for two months or more, perhaps accidentally meet him, go out together again for a few months, then suddenly he fails to come again. We never quarrel, and he never goes out of town.

Whenever he leaves me he promises to write, but he has never sent a word of apology yet. Kindly give me your advice as to how I should treat him if I ever see him again. S. D.

WOULD not waste my time on such an unsatisfactory sweetheart if I were you. Treat him civilly, but do not put yourself out on his account. Do not let his variable attentions prevent you from making friends with some more satisfactory man.

How to Care for Valuable Jewelry

"TO WOMEN who have had such experiences, and to those who ask me how to clean their jewelry at home, the thing simplest and only safe way is to wash it in clean water with a pure white toilet soap and enough ammonia to cut the dirt.

This process applies equally to jewelry with stones, though perhaps a more effective way of brightening a diamond, or a garnet, etc., is a thorough scrubbing with ether and soap and a brush with soft bristles.

Soft jewelry should never be cleaned with any kind of prepared polish, for all cleaning powders and fluids contain in powder form that dull the surface and brilliancy than the finish.

For silver pieces, however, nothing is better, for without some preparation powerful enough to remove the tarnish few surfaces of the silver table dishes constantly in use would be kept bright.

A silver cleansing concoction applied to gold jewelry to clean it invariably cuts it, so never use it.

In preparing a bath for jewelry take lukewarm water and to every two tablespoonfuls of it add one teaspoonful of household ammonia. In a nursery dish or piece of castile or any brand toilet soap that is not perfumed, shave enough to form a thick lather and then add the ammonia water. If many articles are to be cleaned make the soap and then applied to the jewelry.

How to Clean

In this way just enough suds is made for each ring, necklace, etc., to clean the stones without caking or making them appear as might happen if the soap were not put into the water. Spread two or three thicknesses of absorbent cotton or an old linen handkerchief on the table, as there is always work in the jewelry that is carried onward when scrubbing the settings, for another motion may separate the hold the prongs have on the stones.

With the gold bracelets, chains, etc., that have been bleached and lose their color this can be used, provided it cleans the pieces.

After the scrubbing a good rinsing under a cold water faucet for each piece is given, and make sure all the soapy water is removed. This necessary, and then, without touching a cloth to the jewelry, each piece should be buried in the prepared boxwood sawdust, such as all practical jewelers use.

Rings, necklaces, etc., left for an hour or two in this sawdust should be thoroughly dry and should have a bright lustre when removed.

If any pieces of this wood powder remain in the setting, they can be readily taken out by brushing with a soft brush such as are used on ladies' brads.

For Precious Stones

While all precious stones and those that are semi precious, are cleaned with water and soap, sentiment must not be a turquoise, once it becomes spotted, can be restored to its original lustre and finish.

With the former it usually takes years before they get so dull and lustreless that they are not fit to wear, but with the latter it is different. They are readily affected, and the color is changed by constant handling. The oil and moisture in the flesh evidently penetrate the porous surface and change the blue to green in spots, which destroys the beauty of the stone. Women should also remember that they wear turquoises if they would use no perfume on their hands, as cosmetics or hands the stones would keep their color and could be worn for an indefinite length of time before getting green.

Gold, if worn daily, gets dirty, of course, but it does not tarnish like silver except when worn by certain persons who have an abnormal breaking down of stones or an abnormal secretion of the skin, which in their systems, when it needs constant attention to keep it bright.

LONG COATS THE FEATURE OF ADVANCE STYLES FOR AUTUMN

Short Jackets of Spring and Summer Will Go the Way of the Short Sleeve.

Early Fall Costume of Light Gray Broadcloth, Showing the Type of Long Coat Which Will Be the Style.

THE lady fair who has prettily pouted and regretted the Summer that short jackets were in vogue, may cheer up. For Dame Fashion has set her seal of approval once more upon the long coats.

The tall woman will once more show to advantage her graceful figure.

The accompanying costume is one of the early Fall styles in broadcloth with a black velvet collar. The three-quarter length coat is made with a three-seamed back, giving the appearance of being a one-piece affair.

The bottom of the coat is cut with two points in the front. The skirt is a pleated circular. The short sleeve has had its day, for most of the Fall gowns are being made with long sleeves, both of the "bishop" and leg of mutton style.

The hat shown is a characteristic model of the early styles of Fall wear.

Ways to Improve Beauty of the Eyes

THE woman who has a proper regard for her personal appearance will do all in her power to preserve and improve the beauty of her eyes. Besides being the "windows of the soul," they play a very important part in the great drama of life called Beauty.

Nothing much can be done to alter the shape of the eye, and only good health can produce the clear "whiteness" of the white which belongs to a perfect eye.

The perfect eye is almond shape, rather full, and with an equal amount of white showing all around the pupil.

Abuse of the eyes in childhood is responsible for many malformations and diseased eyes. It is well to remember at all ages that, when reading, the light should always be strong—not the wavering flame of a candle—and from the side. This last point is important, and much better than having the light at the back. A great substitute is to have an unshaded lamp on the table by which to read.

Bathing weak eyes in boracic acid water at night strengthens them; but never be induced into using lotions or drugs that are manufactured for the purpose of making the eyes seem brilliant through dilation of the pupil.

Massage by circular movements at the side of the eyes, and as the beauty of any eye is spoiled by "puffiness," massage regularly to avoid this.

Place the fingers against the nose and draw them lightly toward the temples, passing under and above—but not over—the puffy places.

Some people have good luck in clipping the eyebrows, others do not. In most cases the growth will be encouraged in this way, but in all cases the delicate point of the lash which, in itself so small, is so very effective, is spoiled.

The eyebrows should be brushed daily, rubbed once a week with oil, and both combed and brushed in the shape of an arch, tapering to a point at the end over the outer corner of the eye.

Always sleep in a fairly dark room; no direct light should strike the eyes while sleeping.

Have You Learned to Speak in Tune?

THAT the American voice is nasal and disagreeable, especially when raised for public speaking, is an acknowledged fact.

That it can be improved is also true.

With some care and study a drawling resonant voice or a pulpit speech may become a "concord of sweet sounds."

The head voice, the throat voice, the thin, harsh voice, which never appears to have any relation with the chest, are all equally disagreeable. Every one ought to be able to place his hand upon his diaphragm and feel a distinct reverberation when voice or speaks.

It is a useful practice to take a long breath and to speak out a sentence, ascertaining the while that the voice is coming from the depths of the lungs, from which you took your long draught of air, and that you are able to maintain sound without interruption.

When you are addressing an audience in a very large hall it is only necessary to speak a little slower, to lay a little more emphasis on the words, and to be certain that the end of every word is finished.

The pitch of the voice is of great account, for there is nothing more uninspiring than a monotonous speaker, and the cultivation of the natural conversational pitch or note is desirable.

If you have to address many other notes at your command as inflection will demand; you should be able to run through the scale in making inquiries; descend in denunciation; use either key to speak with pathos; but the normal note should always be attained when you begin to tune.

This question of speaking in tune is a very interesting one, and if you study voice production you will find that half the difficulties and hindrances to proficiency both in reading and in speaking, arise from the fact that the voice is out of tune.

Women Don't Tell the Truth Because Men Don't Like It

THERE are certain qualities, moulded in a certain form, and women have responded by moulding themselves on those lines, which assuredly are not the lines of truth.

There are others, such as strict veracity and love of truth, which doubtless he himself would place in the same category, but which every woman knows perfectly he is very well do without.

For, although chief among the virtues he esteems is that power of tact and keenness, peculiarly feminine, which is possessed by the woman of tact and sympathy, yet the really tactful, sympathetic woman must be all things to all men, and that is an attitude of mind quite incompatible with a strict truthfulness, however charming it may appear to the opposite sex.

If it be true that a man is what a woman makes him, it is not less true that in course of time women have become what men in their hearts wish them to be.

Thus, men have desired women

No "White" Lies

MEN may protest in vain that they demand truthfulness in women, and may even deceive themselves on this point, but if they had really wished woman to be truthful in the past, truthful she would have been in the present, and the most charming girl up to date would be she who spoke her mind most freely.

But also, in point of fact, the frank, straightforward girl has a very hard time of it, and by no means finds her virtue one applauded by men or women, for these truthful ones are rarely favorites with the opposite sex, and unless gifted with exceptional beauty, brains or talent, usually contrive to make a failure of their lives, while the women who practice the gentle art of deception most successfully generally contrive to do so at some one else's cost, at the same time filling their own lap full of good things.

Women sometimes seem to think that they have the right to tell an untruth; being the weaker sex they imagine that they will be excused if they fall back upon this mode of self-defence.

They are very fond of calling these untruths "white lies." These wretched white lies cover a multitude of feminine sins.

There is not such a thing as a white lie; never has been and never can be. A statement or excuse can only be truth or untruth. There is no go-between.

Then there is the "society" lie, which the fair sex so often indulge in, in order to cover up or hide some social blunder which must be kept secret at any cost.

All Men's Fault

NOTHING can be nobler than true womanhood, which is the embodiment of everything that is good, truthful and affectionate.

Woman's powers of dissembling have been fostered and to a large extent created by man's ongoing to see in her something absolutely different from himself, and the woman who masks her real self from the man of her choice is infinitely more attractive to him than the one who tears the veil of mystery aside and appears clothed in the garments of truth.

It is not women's fault that they are not truthful. The lie is the refuge of the weak. It is only those who have nothing to fear who can afford to be absolutely truthful.

Where men will defend themselves with their fists or at the point of the sword, women instinctively fly to deceit. Yet there are many who would be glad to be truthful could they be free from the tyranny of convention.

But as it is a woman will never tell a man everything he wants to know about herself, nor yet a suitable more than she deems it good for him to know, and thus it is that she remains a delightful mystery.

Expert Advice to Women on How

TO HAVE BEAUTIFUL HAIR

TRESS of life, worry and consequent nervous exhaustion streak the hair with gray, cause it to fall out, dulls the color, or renders it brittle. Inattention to the cleanliness of the scalp is a still more general cause of baldness or scanty locks.

It does not wash so much washing as brushing, so much "hair food" as cleansing the pores and roots of the hair from dan druff and accumulation of oils and pomades.

The constant use of stimulants for the hair amounts to ill treatment which the hair resents, and it will finally get into that inert, dull condition that nothing may be. Above all, keep all toilet necessaries for the head perfectly clean, using a little carbolic or ammonia vinegar in the water those things are washed in.

Immediate steps must be taken to improve the general health. Avoid worry or excessive brainwork, take plenty of nourishment and regular exercise. Cut the hair about every two months.

Castor oil is a splendid stimulant, so is diluted carbolic acid. This last, indeed, ought always to be present in the soaps and washing waters for hair, scalp and comb and brushes.

Shampoo the head every three or four weeks with lukewarm water to which has been added the beaten yolk of an egg and a pinch of borax.

Bathing weak eyes in boracic acid water at night strengthens them; but never be induced into using lotions or drugs that are manufactured for the purpose of making the eyes seem brilliant through dilation of the pupil.

Massage by circular movements at the side of the eyes, and as the beauty of any eye is spoiled by "puffiness," massage regularly to avoid this.

Place the fingers against the nose and draw them lightly toward the temples, passing under and above—but not over—the puffy places.

Some people have good luck in clipping the eyebrows, others do not. In most cases the growth will be encouraged in this way, but in all cases the delicate point of the lash which, in itself so small, is so very effective, is spoiled.

"SHADOWS OF NEW YORK"

Copyright, 1900, by American Journal-Examiner

SO Grieve had been engaged in this girl; and evidently he cared so much for the cur. Haggard was thinking with a curious wonder, that even after his cowardly treatment of her last night she wanted to see him, poor little fool, probably to plead with him and forgive him.

A woman will forgive so much, humble her pride so deeply, where a man she loves is concerned.

Haggard scribbled Grieve's Harlem address on a sheet of paper and handed it to the clerk.

"Tell the lady that this is the only address I know. That if, as she thinks, Mr. Grieve has left that address, I am unable to give her any further information. You had better add that Mr. Grieve has left the employ of this firm."

The clerk went out with the message and the address. He returned the next moment.

"She is sorry to trespass on your kindness, sir, but she says she would be grateful if you could see her for a few minutes."

Haggard bit his lip, then he cried brusquely:

"Quite out of the question. I wonder you troubled me with such a message, Shandeworth. Really, I cannot have my time over the friends of my discharged employes. If she has come to plead for Grieve, to ask me to take him back into my service, you may tell her it is quite useless. I can't see the woman. Don't trouble me again about the business, Shandeworth."

Shandeworth retired, bungling the door.

Haggard crossed over to the window and looked cautiously out over the wire-screen window screen bearing the name of the firm, that covered the lower panes, with a sort of feverish interest.

He saw the girl pass the window with her troubled face. A pretty girl, too, in her way, with big white eyes.

He had wondered yesterday what there was in Grieve to appeal to any woman; yet this girl actually cared for the man who had treated her so cruelly! And now Grieve was dead and she would have to find a new sweetheart.

Perhaps it was as well she had come this morning. She was less likely to trouble him again.

A Dead Man

She might be in the street, waiting when he came out of the office, to waylay him. The possibility came to him with a momentary thrill of fear. But he realized that it was unlikely; she would have nothing to gain by it.

He had sent out word that Grieve had been discharged from the firm, and that his new address was not known at the office.

It would never occur to her that he, Philip Haggard, was the man who saw with her sweetheart last night.

Over the blind he watched her walk away slowly and despondently.

Then he saw her suddenly and excitedly cross to where a newsboy was selling early editions of the evening papers.

He watched her open the paper and search eagerly for the paragraph, no doubt, to which the placards referred, with a sense of growing uneasiness.

Would she suspect that the Mr. J. De Graves referred to there might by any chance be her sweetheart?

Flood of Fears

The girl found the paragraph, read it, and walked on.

Haggard would have given a good deal for a glimpse of her face just then, but it was turned away.

That paragraph had aroused even the shallow sensibilities in her mind might she not?

Philip Haggard pulled himself together with a sudden effort.

It was dangerous to give way to such fancies, he told himself with set teeth; if a man started on he was prone began to plied to absurd fancies, let himself be be for him!"

frightened by bogies, and his nerve went, and he grew confused.

Just now it was essential, above all things, that his mind should be under control.

He sat down at the desk again, tried to settle down to work, though he found it impossible to concentrate his thoughts on it; his thoughts, in spite of himself, kept slipping away after that girl.

Then his door came open with a rush again.

There was a sudden commotion in the outer office and the sound of excited voices.

CHAPTER XCIX.
Who Came In?

THE door of Haggard's private room was unceremoniously flung open, and one of the staff appeared on the threshold with a face of excitement.

"You'll hardly believe me, sir," he cried excitedly, but before Heaven it's the truth —a dead man has just walked into the office!"

Every vestige of color died out of Philip Haggard's face. He started at the intruder with dry lips that moved spasmodically, but no sound nor word leaked into the office.

Every vestige of color died out of Philip Haggard's face. He started at the intruder with dry lips that moved spasmodically, but no sound nor word leaked into the office.

Instantly his thoughts flew to Grieve lying unclaimed in the morgue. Did the man speak of Grieve?

"Speak, man! What do you mean?" he cried, finding his voice.

The late partner, Mr. Wynter, sir, has been in to ask if there are any letters

The room flooded with the morning sunshine suddenly seemed to Philip Haggard as cold as though invaded by a breath from the Arctic.

"Impossible!" the hoarse cry broke from him. "You must be dreaming, man, to bring such a mad story. You know that poor creature Mr. Wynter sailed by was lost with all on board!"

"I know that, sir, and a feather would have knocked me over when I saw him! Will you come yourself?"

Haggard rose, with every nerve vibrant, telling himself the thing was impossible and that he must prove the thing impossible, and accompanied the man.

It was a cold-looking building, and the offices were rather inconveniently arranged. The general office, partitioned off from the big room where the clerks sat, served as the ordinary office and waiting room for those who came to see the heads of the firm on business.

Wynter Aboard?

"I was sitting in the office there, sir," said the clerk, evidently bewildered and not a little scared, "when the door opened and one of the late partner as plainly as I can see you, sir.

"He put his head in at the door just in his old way; he didn't cross the threshold, but just stood out in the passage and said: 'Any letters for me, Jackson?' I was so scared that I just stared at him for a second or two, and that Mr. Wynter had been on board that steamer that went down; then I—I just rushed to you, sir, leaving him to wait there."

It seemed as though this strange announcement had startled the clerks in the big office also, for it had startled Haggard.

For, as Haggard appeared, one of them was about to open the door of the little inquiry office; it is certain that a truth, there was in Jackson's incredible statement. They waited in breathless eagerness to Haggard, with set face, strode through the little aisle and flung open the door.

The inquiry office was empty.

As Haggard realized this fact, with an overwhelming sense of relief, he darted a swift, questioning frown at Jackson.

"I can only say Mr. Wynter was here, sir," he cried, "only he didn't come in—he just waited outside in the passage."

Certainly the outer door stood half open, which seemed to point to some one having called.

Haggard strode through into the passage. It was empty.

He walked along to the entrance. There was no sign of Wynter outside.

If You Know This Woman Shopper Tell Her to Claim the Award.

THE last two or three daily snapshots of women shoppers have not been identified. There was a rush of claimants last week, but this week's efforts of the camera man have been apparently unappreciated.

Up to Monday morning eight of the previous ten photos were quickly recognized and the originals of each received the daily award of $2.

This week, however, the camera man has caught a bit more elusive subjects. Better look 'em over and see if you are among them. If not you, perhaps one of them is some friend of yours.

Remember the camera man gets one of these snapshots daily in the shopping district. The daily prize may be had by merely identifying the photo.

The Original of This Snapshot Will Receive a Prize of $2.

DOUGLAS WILL SUPPORT THE PARTY CHOICE

Former Governor Never Desired Nomination, He Declares to Quincy.

Former Governor William L. Douglas, in a public letter to-day, clinches the announcement made two days ago by Chairman Josiah Quincy of the Democratic State Committee that he has not at any time desired a renomination. Incidentally, Mr. Douglas denies the right of any of his friends to make statements to the country, and states that he will support the Democratic candidate, whoever he may be.

In his letter he says:

"I have never desired the nomination for Governor, nor intimated to any person that I would again enter politics. My intimate associates have been well aware of this, and has been my expressed determination at all times.

"It is no doubt true that some of my overzealous friends assumed to represent me, even go so far as to speculate as to Governor and Mr. Moran, but, believe me, their action was unauthorized and I object to coupling me in any manner.

"In conclusion, let me say that I am not treacherous, I am not sulking, and I beg to say emphatically to the leader of the party, I disclaim any responsibility for the present situation and again assure the members of the convention, whoever he may be, that he will have my support."

LYNN BANISHES HOKEY-POKEY

LYNN, Mass., Aug. 30.—The hokey-pokey industry was summarily squelched in Lynn to-day, when Mayor Barrett issued a sweeping order that all vendors of it must get out of business. As a result of eating cheap ice cream purchased for a penny per cone from street sellers, Harold Sparks, five years old, of Alford place, was taken the latter part of a few days ago, and a physician who was called pronounced the boy a victim of ptomaine poisoning. On the same day two brothers, John and Peter Pappas, aged four and five years, respectively, also living at No. 3 Hollingsworth street, were taken sick, and they too were poisoned. The three cases were rallied to the attention of Mayor Barrett, and he acted for the abolition of the hokey-pokey industry forthwith to-day.

This Government Really IS Going to Employ Chinese

President Roosevelt Has Issued the Order—Chinese Coolies Are to Do Our Work on the Canal—BUT IT WON'T LAST LONG

What has hitherto been a rumor is confirmed as FACT. President Roosevelt, on consultation with his son-in-law, Mr. Longworth, actually has decided that the Chinese shall do the national work at Panama.

The laws of this country forbid the importation of Chinese labor. THE LAWS OF THIS COUNTRY FORBID ABSOLUTELY THE IMPORTATION OF ANY KIND OF CONTRACT LABOR.

The public sentiment of the nation is overwhelmingly against the Chinese as competitors in our labor market, overwhelmingly against their admission to any American territory.

The territory through which the Panama Canal is to pass IS AMERICAN TERRITORY. It belongs to us, it is under our control. When the Chinese are put to work there they are put to work on American soil, for American money, in competition with or in place of American workingmen.

It is remembered how Mr. Roosevelt some time ago took up the Chinese question with an eye to modifying the rules protecting this country from Chinese competition. The inspectors of our ports were ordered to be more lenient.

They were compelled to recognize a passport from any one of our consular agents in China. WE HAVE LEARNED SINCE THEN THAT THOSE CONSULAR AGENTS HAVE BEEN SELLING THE PASSPORTS AT SO MUCH EACH.

When President Roosevelt issued his order as regards Chinese immigration here this newspaper expressed its regrets ON BEHALF OF THE WHOLE COUNTRY.

Still deeper and stronger regret should be expressed now that Mr. Roosevelt has followed up his original act by making the United States government a large wholesale employer of coolie labor on United States soil.

Publication of the fullest details unfortunately leaves no room for doubt. We find that the government asks for twenty-five hundred of these coolies to begin with.

THEY ARE TO BRING IN THEIR FAMILIES, WIVES AND CHILDREN.

We repeat what we have said, that American labor, white or black, COULD HAVE DUG THE CANAL.

If the government had acted in accordance with public opinion it would have spent the money necessary to make work on the canal safe for white men.

It is a disgrace to the nation if we really propose to bury thousands of Chinese beside that trench, rather than take the necessary steps to do the work promptly and safely with American workingmen.

There are enough in this country in need of work. There is no reason why millions of American dollars should be paid to Chinese contractors rather, who are no better than sellers of slaves.

There is no reason why thousands of Chinese laborers and their families should be brought to our doors, scattered throughout Central America.

There is, above all, no reason why Mr. Roosevelt should establish a precedent which will lead to the employment of coolies more and more on this continent, and make certain the settlement here of the Chinese race, to which the country is opposed.

Mr. Roosevelt has made a very serious mistake. His party will feel the effects of it this Fall, and he himself will realize its effect very soon.

It is a matter to which this newspaper and all others representing public feeling will return often.

We record with deep regret the fact that the President actually has taken steps to introduce Chinese labor into America on an enormous scale, and we point out the necessity of checking this pro-Chinese sentiment in the surest way—AT THE POLLS.

Welcome to Mr. Bryan

Mr. Bryan's welcome home yesterday must appeal to him as the most flattering experience of the long journey which he thus brought to a fitting end. Abroad he was honored by princes and kings. At the threshold of his own country he was met on the common ground of equality by his fellow countrymen; and, if with less pretension, at least with greater and more heartfelt sincerity, welcomed back among them. Small wonder that before the plaudits of the welcoming delegations Mr. Bryan, who could continue to be eloquent in the presence of princes, was at a loss yesterday for power to tell how good he felt to be back in America once more.

THE WISH

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

SHOULD some great angel say to me to-morrow,
"Thou must rescind thy pathway from the start,
But God will grant, in pity, for thy sorrow
Some one dear wish, the nearest to thy heart."
This were my wish from my life's dim beginning:
Let be what has been! wisdom planned the whole;
My want, my woe, my errors and my sinning,
All, all were needed lessons for my soul.

Little Editorials from the People

PROTESTS AGAINST "DEFORMED" SPELLING.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

May I have space enough to enter a word of protest against the so-called "reformed" spelling? "Deformed" would be more to the point. I am sure that few thinking people have given it serious consideration, until now it has been thrust upon their attention by the fact that the President has given it his official sanction.

Aside from all questions of sentiment, precedent or associations, any individual attempts, from whatever source, to judge or cause to be adopted such spelling reforms must fail from lack of uniformity. To insure success the movement must be universal, at least among all English-speaking nations. It would be necessary for an international congress to assemble and seriously and carefully consider what words may be changed and what eliminated or added. And, further, the new system must not only be accepted and authorized, but so far as possible, enforced by those nations using the language.

Without such action the movement must necessarily cause hopeless confusion, and will be doomed to certain defeat.

Until such a time comes it is a useless waste of time to suggest the new system.

It would seem that those who are hungering for reform might direct their efforts in other direction where the results to be achieved would pay better returns for their outlay of time and thought.

Such a reform is surely needed in our present ridiculous system of weights and measures handed down to us from barbarous times and uncertain sources. It is antiquated, awkward and useless. It is hard to learn and harder to remember, there is no relation between the units of weight and those of measure, and it is so complicated that compared with it our spelling is simple and clear.

If action is delayed in dealing with this view let him try to repeat offhand all our rules of weights and measures, with their variations of liquid and dry, avoirdupois, apothecary, surveyors' rods and chains, grams and grains, finks, perch, long and short tons, etc., etc. If one man in a hundred can succeed in the attempt I will cheerfully withdraw my argument.

And then let us remember that we have at our hand a system which is simple, logical, related in its different parts and now in successful use, after the test of years, by other nations—the metric system. We are without excuse in refusing to adopt this system, and yet we, as a people, call ourselves progressive, are among the last to take advantage of it.

The expense of making the change would, of course, be great, and the inconvenience for a time considerable, but here is a reform that would be well worth the effort. Let the reformers bend their energies where they may produce results commensurate with the time, thought and effort involved.

Don't Say "I Can't"

By Winifred Black

A GREAT, big, broad-shouldered, athletic man stood in line to get a loaf of bread and a bucket of soup at one of the refugee camps in San Francisco the other day.

Some one asked him why he didn't go to work and earn the $3 a day which the city is paying for men to clean up the debris.

"Oh," said the athletic man, "I couldn't do that sort of work. I don't know how. I'm a bookkeeper;" and so he took his loaf of bread and his pail of soup and went back to his ragged little tent and had a good time being a gentleman out of a job.

The refugee camps of San Francisco are full of just such people, the authorities say.

Where in the world have they all come from? What's happened to the old-fashioned American, who made it his boast that he could make a living on a desert island a thousand miles from nowhere without a fishline or even a bent pin in sight.

I thought the helpless "this-one-thing-I-can-do-and-no-other" man was always a foreigner—but it seems he has plenty of American brothers after all.

A man in Chicago made all preparations to commit suicide one day. A friend of mine asked him what was the matter.

"I'm out of my last penny," said the man who was going to kill himself, "This was my last nickel but I paid for a hot cup of coffee."

"Do you know why you had to wait so long for that cup of coffee?" said my friend.

"No," said the man who was going to commit suicide.

"This restaurant needs waiters; the proprietor is offering big wages for green help."

The man who was going to commit suicide nodded blankly, he didn't see what such a piece of information as that had to do with him, then he sighed.

"I wish I was a waiter," he said. "I'm a bookkeeper," and yet, when my friend had persuaded him for half an hour he did take the position as waiter, and, strange as it may seem, he made a good one. At the end of the week he had paid for his room and was saving money to send home for his wife. He wasn't a lazy man, he was simply stupid.

Habit meant more to him than even life itself.

A woman came in to see me the other day with a story of desperate need. She brought a little, pale, big-eyed child with her, and she told me that she and the child were hungry, and had no place to sleep.

She was a neat, bright-looking woman, and I was delighted. "Why," I said, "here's a letter for you; a woman I know wants maids in a little family hotel. You can get the place this morning, good wages and a comfortable home."

The woman stared at me in horrified amazement. "Why, I can't do that kind of work," she said. "I'd rather die!" "Or beg," said I. And that woman will never understand why I stopped feeling sorry for her then and there.

THE STENOGRAPHER

She Says Food Fads and Some Other Fads Should Be Recognized as Valid Grounds for Divorce

By Dorothy Dix

"I SEE," said the Stenographer, "that the Pittsburg courts have refused to grant a divorce to a woman who charged her husband with cruel and inhuman conduct because he forced her to gorge on health food messes and then to pedal a bicycle to help digest it.

"The Pittsburg idea of the way a man has a right to treat his wife is a beaut," commented the Bookkeeper. "They know all the thirty-seven different varieties of methods of getting rid of a lady to whom you happen to be married when she begins to pall on your taste, or if she doesn't match your new silk furniture, but the starving process is a new one. I should think, though, that after the Hartje and Corey episodes a woman would consider she was playing to all sorts of luck merely to be treated like a Strasburg goose—sort of painless process of removal, you know."

"Huh!" exclaimed the Stenographer, "not for mine! Asperse my character if you will, but leave me my appetite! Pardon me off, but do not cut off my pie!"

"Amen," ejaculated the Bookkeeper, feelingly. "God pity the unfortunates who are married to health food faddists and those with the cereal habit."

"I'd sooner grapple with a life partner with the drink or dope habit," said the Stenographer, "for at least the drunkard and the fiend with the needle doesn't insist on you joining them in their orgies, whereas the minute a man or woman takes to eating sawdust and drinking dishwater coffee they can't be happy until they have cut off your beefsteak and Mocha."

"That's so," agreed the Bookkeeper; "nothing fills a person so full of self-righteousness as prunes."

Gets on One's Nerve

"AND that's no joke," said the Stenographer. "If there's anything that gets on my nerves it's to meet up with one of these dyspeptic-looking geniuses, with about three sprouts of alfalfa on each side of his chin, who sits up and swills oatmeal for dinner and tells he lifts, while he bolted weeps how they are digging their graves with their teeth.

"It's bad enough to have to listen to him, without throwing dishes at his head, but think what it must be to be married to a man like that and forced to eat what he likes, instead of what your stomach calls for.

"If that Pittsburg woman didn't have a good case for divorce and alimony they had as well shut up the divorce mill."

"Poor lady," sighed the Bookkeeper, sympathetically. "It's a wonder she doesn't elope with the proprietor of a delicatessen shop."

"It's funny when you come to think of it," mused the Stenographer, "that divorces are given for the wrong things and the things that ought to be real causes for hauling a husband or a wife up to the bar of justice are thrown out."

"Uh-huh," grumbled the Bookkeeper, "some of the testimony in recent divorce cases had the police calendar skinned to a finish, so far as I could see."

"Oh, the big crimes aren't so much," returned the Stenographer, airily. "You can always forgive them, and, if you can't you can be a martyr, which is a whole lot of compensation, but if I was running the divorce mill I would hand out the decree and alimony to the men and women who could show the most gnat stings—from the nasty little habits and tempers and ways that drive you frantic and make you look like a three-ply idiot if you complain of them.

Grounds of Divorce

"EVERY time a gentleman bobbed up in court with a pale, lemon-colored saleratus biscuit and a deposition that it was his wife's handiwork, and that she fed him on that kind of grub, I would give him a divorce and my blessing.

"Same thing if he could prove that' he could not stay down town until 12 o'clock occasionally without being met with a curtain lecture and a water-spout of tears. Likewise, if he could produce evidence that wifey had the habit of always referring to the millionaires she might have married, or drawing invidious comparisons between her lot and that of Mrs. Smith around the corner.

"And I'd give a woman a divorce and steen dollars a week alimony if she could prove that her husband had the 'M-M—M-M' habit of conversation; if he got funny at her expense when they had company; if he went snooping around in the kitchen, seeing how thick the potato parings were; if he made her beg for every penny, and asked her where that quarter was he gave her week before last, and if he always knocked everything she did and said.

"What are a few goo-goo eyes, or a howling jag now and then, or even an occasional backslide in having a row in the house, day in and day out, with a nagging, fretting, slovenly wife, or one who sends the domestic mercury down to the freezing point?"

It's easier to live with cheerful vices than melancholy virtues," said the Bookkeeper, sententiously.

"That's the reason that my sympathies go out to that poor Pittsburg woman with the health food husband," replied the Stenographer, "and if breakfast foods aren't included in the statutes as a just cause for divorce, they ought to be. For if you persist in using 'em long enough, you are sure to need one."
